Government must not allow politics to get in the way of a good education

The present self-organized secondary school system in Hong Kong is run by the Education Bureau. This system is in many ways more flexible than the Western system, but this also means that it is more prone to corruption and favoritism. The Education Bureau is responsible for the overall education policy in Hong Kong, including the curriculum, school inspection, and teacher training. The curriculum is designed to meet the needs of students in Hong Kong, and it is based on the principles of universalism and inclusivity. The curriculum covers a wide range of subjects, including Chinese, English, mathematics, science, history, and geography. The curriculum is designed to be flexible and adaptable, and it is periodically reviewed and updated to ensure that it remains relevant and effective. The Education Bureau also oversees the recruitment and training of teachers, and it provides support and resources to schools to help them provide high-quality education. The Education Bureau is also responsible for the development of educational research and technology, and it works closely with universities and other educational institutions to promote innovation and improvement. Overall, the Education Bureau plays a crucial role in the education system in Hong Kong, and it is committed to ensuring that all students have access to a high-quality education.