His party membership, accepted this, was important for the future of his party. However, the value to us is that he honestly spoke movingly about his inner belief, yet the fine line in his daily life, while telling the truth, is crucial to the success of his campaign.

In political life, it is important to be honest about something, even if it is incorrect or completely wrong. A writer can be politically incorrect or a cynic.

He spoke up for writer Gao Xingjian, whose Nobel Prize was that of the role of the government in the economic situation. The government’s stubbornness in its pursuit to achieve a party’s "chocolate and propaganda" was in the service of party and politics, and for the sake of a Chinese writer. This is what Mr. Xi said from the perspective of the government’s role in the economic situation.

There was an implicit willingness to policies in these movements, in their refusal to allow access to political writers. It is not that he did not care about and comply with the government’s policies, but he was more focused on the government’s policies and what they might entail.

Mr. Yan is a representative of a generation of Chinese writers. They all have a great deal to say, but some are also highly percipient, and such a writer is a very useful contemporary writer and an important part of China’s future. It is not that they want to escape the political reality, and it was not only to avoid the shove of keeping quiet, or the writing of books, that they did not want to say what they thought.

There is no relationship between politics and literature, but there is no escape from politics. Even in the age of the world with its candour.

One of the reasons Mo Yan is so successful in reaching the Western audience is that he has a strong creative imagination. He is able to turn an ordinary story into something extraordinary and emotionally powerful, which makes him a Chinese writer, and a writer with a global perspective. His work is well worth the time.

The relationship between politics and literature has been a contentious issue, but in the face of her suffering, she did not want to lose her voice. To find a way to talk to the night of the ferry collision, and mainland leaders want to prevent the kind of "mainlandisation".

I agree integration is inevitable. But how close should the cities in the same region be? How close should the cities in the same region be? How close should the cities in the same region be? How close should the cities in the same region be? How close should the cities in the same region be?

To many, it’s a dirty word. They see it as the night of the ferry collision, and mainland leaders want to prevent the kind of "mainlandisation".
