The middle path

Yung Tao says Beijing’s determination to maintain stable development will mean steering the economy above a floor of 7% per cent growth but below the ‘ceiling’ of runaway inflation.

T he paper election which is currently underway has made the country’s political future more uncertain than ever. But the government has been firm in its determination to maintain stable development by steering the economy above a floor of 7% per cent growth but below the ‘ceiling’ of runaway inflation. Beijing’s determination to maintain stable development will ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals of economic development.

Yung Tao says that the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says that the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.

Yung Tao says the government is taking a balanced approach to economic growth and stability. Beijing is aiming for a sustainable and harmonious development, which will not only benefit the country’s economic growth but also contribute to the country’s overall development. The government is trying to balance economic growth with social stability, and it is working to ensure that the country’s economic policies are in line with the country’s overall goals.