The paradigm between Christmas and the Lunar New Year is one of great significance and meaning. In many places, the two festivals are celebrated with great joy and excitement. However, in Hong Kong, the Lunar New Year is often overshadowed by the events of the past year. The problem is that the government’s response to the protests has been ineffective, and the situation has escalated.

The rest of the world has come to realise that the situation in Washington can be bought.

The term "not a state" is not as clear-cut as it seems. It is often used to describe entities that are not recognized by the international community. However, in Hong Kong, the situation is much more complex. The government’s response to the protests has been ineffective, and the situation has escalated.

Cronysm and nepotism are hated at HK, not the rich.

Stephen Vines discusses the welfare chief’s characterisation of society.
