Kitty Parkes says Hong Kong planners have created a liveable city that attracts talent and investment.

Raymond Tang says if young people want to be treated as adults, they should act responsibly and be prepared to face the legal consequences when breaking the law, even for a social cause.

G. Bin Zhao says the 2022 Olympics could give China's economy a big shot in the arm, if Beijing sparks greater public interest in winter sports.

Andrew Sheng says the city's laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.

Andrew Sheng says the city’s laissez-faire policy needs to be seen in the context of local politics, which is grinding us down while our regional competitors up their game.

Still in the fastest-growing region in the world, Hong Kong faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

While the waves of talent from the stock market have yet to show any signs of subsiding, and China's economy faces the challenge of moving forward: social unity.

Today’s students haven’t earned their political rights.